VOTERS DIVIDE OFFICES BETWEEN PARTIES; CONTROL OF LEGISLATURE STILL UNCERTAIN

What looked to be a sweeping victory for the Nationalist party took a turn at midnight and developed into a stand-off dividing the honors in Tuesday's election.

Phil Peters (N) took an early lead in his race for governor and went on to defeat Wayne Gandee (F) 185-162. But Peters was able to muster only a 3-3 split on the six member Board of Public Works. The Supreme Court fell to the Federalists 4-1 and there is a possibility that the Feds also will control the legislature.

Final returns at midnight put the Senate in a 13-13 tie while a 27-25 lead is owned by Federalists in the House of Delegates. If the new governor is able to engineer control of the Senate, he will get half of the legislature. This is about par at Boys State since the governor rarely has more than one house on his side.

Complete county-by-county tabulations for all state races are on page two of today's paper.

By 11:30 Tuesday night, it seemed that Peters' forces would have a 4-2 margin on the BPW. At that point, Danny Hines (N) seemed to have a one-vote victory (168-167) over Erwin Conrad for Secretary of State.

Conrad and the Federalists protested and asked for a recount. A check of ballots put Conrad in office by an 11-vote margin.

The traditional independence of Boys State voters was fully demonstrated by what happened in balloting for the Supreme Court. The Federalists swept the state's highest tribunal by a 4-1 vote. This is a welcome gain for the Feds who now trail 70-52 in judgeships over the past 25 years.

Two new amendments were tacked onto the constitution in Tuesday's election by healthy margins. By a 260-294 margin, Staters ordered that no citizens could be a member of both the Executive and Legislative branches of government.

The margin for the second amendment was smaller, 208-139, probably because it was opposed by the Federalists. Voters returned the office of Superintendent of Schools to the ballot after an absence of three years.

Of greater significance, voters put a new office in the Executive Department. Beginning next year, Staters will elect a Secretary of Industrial Commerce to help boost the economy of the state.

Both amendments were passed by the 1961 legislature to be submitted for approval this year.

Gov.-elect Peters began his activities at GHQ last night shortly after his election was confirmed. He named the following members of the State Board of Education: Terry Fleming, president, Rick Blair, John Everhart, James Cyrus and Lionel Torbett, all Nationalists; James Gabriel, Gavin Charles, Paul Klenowski and John Fratto, Federalists.

The Board held its first meeting at midnight and appointed Bill Rogers as the Superintendent of Schools.

TUESDAY'S SPORTS

Rain slowed part of the sports program Tuesday and sped up another part. Because baseball and softball were out of the question on soggy diamonds, the paved surfaces of the volleyball and basketball courts made a speed up possible.

Closest contest was the Upshur F - Monroe F basketball game which was won by Upshur in the final 15 seconds.

HERE'S STORY OF MONDAY'S PARTY PROGRAMS

The Federalists

The Federalists Tuesday night took a stand against one of the two amendments considered in the election. They favored the other.

Although the party was in favor of the creation of a Secretary of Industrial Commerce, it opposed the amendment calling for such an office. Their reason was that the return of the Superintendent of Schools to the ballot, as specified in the amendment, was not in the best interests of the state.

Urging the defeat of the amendment, the Federalists promised to support legislation supporting the commerce post in this year's legislature. If passed, the subject then would be put to a vote in the 1963 Boys State.

The Federalists also urged the installation of an intercommunications system at Jacksons Mill to speed the work of Boys State. They urged Staters to "talk West Virginia louder and prouder" in the Centennial year ahead.

After presenting candidates for the state offices, the Federalists put the spotlight on their nominee for governor, Wayne Gandee. He mentioned the qualities of leadership and stressed the need for humility. "We must set out on the road this week to improve the image of West Virginia," Gandee said, as he urged his listeners to "vote the way that will pave the way for West Virginia to go all the way."

The Nationalists

In a presentation highlighted by an attack on out-of-state business and an act by a ventriloquist, the Nationalists offered their candidates at Tuesday's pre-election assembly program.

Gubernatorial candidate Phillip Peters urged a "reasonable" tax on the state's resources and urged his listeners to "root out the out-of-staters who are not interested in West Virginia".

David Lee, candidate for treasurer, was featured in a short skit with two dummy characters, one on each knee. Lee is an accomplished ventriloquist.

Nationalist chairman Bill Rogers opened the program as party workers distributed copies of the platform to the entire audience. Keynoter Lyndon Waugh, speaking in a voice worn by cheering, covered the platform's major points. One, which was particularly timely, was for a better system of ventilation in the Assembly Hall. With 13 giant flood lights heating the hall during filming operations, temperatures were extremely high.

(This has never before been a problem at Boys State and probably never will again.)

After the program had been completed and the Assembly was dismissed, Nationalist workers lighted a number of red flares across the street from the Hall. They formed the letter "P" in honor of their gubernatorial candidate.
